1 INTRODUCTION

- 1.1 The Personal Data Protection Act 2012 (No. 26 of 2012) (“PDPA”) governs the collection, use and disclosure of individuals’ personal data by organisations¹ in a manner that recognises both the right of individuals to protect their personal data and the need for organisations to collect, use and disclose personal data for purposes that a reasonable person would consider appropriate in the circumstances. The PDPA comprises two main sets of provisions, covering the Data Protection Provisions and Do Not Call Provisions.
- 1.2 These guidelines provide an overview of the obligations under the PDPA and how they may apply to election activities² that involve the collection, use or disclosure of personal data. These Guidelines are intended to highlight specific aspects of the PDPA, and are not intended to exhaustively address every obligation in the PDPA or every scenario or arrangement that may arise in the context of the election activities. These Guidelines should be read in conjunction with the document titled “Introduction to the Guidelines”, including the disclaimers set out therein.
- 1.3 You are encouraged to also read the Advisory Guidelines on Key Concepts in the PDPA, as well as any other relevant Guidelines that the Personal Data Protection Commission (“PDPC”) may issue from time to time.

2 APPLICATION OF PDPA TO ELECTION ACTIVITIES

- 2.1 Personal data is defined in the PDPA as “data, whether true or not, about an individual who can be identified —
(a) from that data; or
(b) from that data and other information to which the organisation has or is likely to have access.”
- 2.2 Examples of personal data include an individual’s full name, NRIC number, passport number, photograph or video image of the individual, personal mobile telephone number, and may include personal email address and residential address.
- 2.3 The PDPA applies to all organisations that undertake any activities relating to the collection, use or disclosure of personal data in Singapore, unless they fall within a category of organisations that is expressly excluded from the application of the PDPA. The following categories of organisations are excluded from the application of the Data Protection Provisions:

¹ The PDPA defines an organisation as “any individual, company, association or body of persons, corporate or unincorporated whether or not formed or recognised under the law of Singapore; or resident, or having an office or a place of business, in Singapore”.

² Please refer to the latest Candidate Handbook issued by Elections Department Singapore for more information.

- (a) Any individual acting in a personal or domestic capacity;
- (b) Any employee³ acting in the course of his or her employment with an organisation;
- (c) Any public agency; and
- (d) Any organisation in the course of acting on behalf of a public agency in relation to the collection, use or disclosure of personal data.

Application of the PDPA to political parties and election candidates

- 2.4 Under the PDPA, political parties and election candidates that conduct election activities involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data are not per se excluded from the Data Protection Provisions. In particular, election candidates will not be treated as carrying out election activities in a personal or domestic capacity.
- 2.5 Further, political parties and election candidates are reminded that they can be held responsible for the actions of their employees (including volunteers) and data intermediaries.
- 2.6 As a general matter, an organisation is responsible for any act done by its employee in the course of his employment with the organisation⁴. Under the PDPA, an “employee” includes a volunteer, and “employment” includes working under an unpaid volunteer work relationship. Therefore, employees could include individuals who are enlisted by the political party or election candidate to perform tasks and undertake responsibilities in contribution to the party or the election candidate under an unpaid volunteer work relationship. For example, this may include volunteers enlisted by the political party to canvass votes on behalf of the party, and individuals enlisted by election candidates to be election agents.
- 2.7 Political parties and election candidates should therefore put in place policies and procedures, and conduct the necessary training to ensure the appropriate handling of personal data by persons whom they engage to perform tasks on their behalf. As good practice, political parties and election candidates should ensure that such persons, including volunteers who are involved in election activities, are properly briefed and appropriately supervised to ensure compliance with the PDPA.

³ Any individual who undertakes work without an expectation of payment is also considered an “employee”.

⁴ Section 53(1) of the PDPA provides that, “Any act done or conduct engaged in by a person in the course of his employment (referred to in this section as the employee) shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as done or engaged in by his employer as well as by him, whether or not it was done or engaged in with the employer’s knowledge or approval.”

Election candidates who are affiliated with a political party

- 2.8 Election candidates who are affiliated with a political party may similarly be considered employees of the political party for purposes of the PDPA⁵. In particular, if an election candidate acted within the scope of his role assigned by the political party to further the aims of the political party, then the candidate will likely be treated as an employee under the PDPA. As such, political parties should ensure that their candidates are briefed on the parties' data protection policies to prevent inadvertent breaches of the PDPA.
- 2.9 Depending on the facts of the case, the Data Protection Provisions can still apply to an election candidate even if he or she is affiliated with a political party, and the culpability for breach of the Data Protection Provisions can rest with the candidate. For instance, when the election candidate deliberately accesses and uses the personal data for his own aims in contravention of the political party's policies, the candidate could be treated as a separate organisation from the political party for the purposes of compliance with the PDPA, despite his affiliation with the political party⁶.
- 2.10 In determining whether or not the political party is responsible for the actions of the election candidate, the PDPC may consider⁷, for instance, the extent to which the election candidate acted outside the scope of his or her role assigned by the political party, the extent to which the actions furthered the political party's aims or the candidate's own aims, and the opportunity afforded to the candidate to commit the breach.

Application of the PDPA to data intermediaries

- 2.11 A data intermediary is defined under the PDPA as an organisation that processes personal data on behalf of another organisation, but does not include an employee of that other organisation. Under the PDPA, a data intermediary that processes personal data pursuant to a contract, which is evidenced or made in writing, will be subject to the Protection and Retention Limitation Obligations, and not any of the other Data Protection Provisions. The organisation that engages the data intermediary will have the same obligations under the PDPA in respect of personal data processed on its behalf, as if the personal data were processed by the organisation itself.

⁶ To be clear, even where an election candidate is found to have acted as a separate organisation in the scenario, the political party may also be held liable for contravention of the PDPA depending on the facts of the case, for example, if the political party did not put in place reasonable security arrangements to protect the personal data in its possession or under its control.

⁷ This will be a highly factual inquiry and the considerations set out here are neither conclusive nor exhaustive.

2.12	Example: Political party hires vendor to manage social media campaign and social media profile platform Political party ABC engages public relations firm, DEF, to run the party’s social media campaign, as well as manage its social media profile platform. Among other things, the written contract between political party ABC and DEF specifies that DEF will use an ABC-provided list containing personal data of constituents to send updates on the party’s election-related activities to those who have signed up to receive the information. In this case, DEF will be considered a data intermediary of political party ABC, and DEF will be subject only to the Protection and Retention Limitation Obligations. Political party ABC will have the same obligations under the PDPA in respect of the constituents’ personal data processed on its behalf by DEF, as if the personal data were processed by political party ABC itself.

2.13 To be clear, when a data intermediary carries out activities that go beyond the processing required by the political party and election candidate under the contract, the data intermediary will be required to comply with all Data Protection Provisions.

3 RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS ETC UNDER OTHER LAWS

3.1 Section 4(6) of the PDPA states that unless otherwise provided in the PDPA, nothing in Parts III to VI of the PDPA shall affect any authority, right, privilege or immunity conferred, or obligation or limitation imposed, by or under the law, including legal privilege, except that the performance of a contractual obligation shall not be an excuse for contravening the PDPA, and the provisions of other written law shall prevail to the extent that any provision of Parts III to VI is inconsistent with the provisions of that other written law. Other provisions in the PDPA which are not inconsistent with other written law will continue to apply.

3.2 Political parties and election candidates should ensure that they comply with relevant laws and regulatory requirements governing election activities (“relevant laws”)⁸. For example, under the Parliamentary Elections Act (Cap. 218), political parties and election candidates may purchase a copy of the registers of electors and use the information in the registers only for communicating with electors. Political parties and election candidates may therefore collect, use or disclose such information, without obtaining consent under the PDPA, to the extent that such collection, use or disclosure is for the purpose of communicating with electors in accordance with the Parliamentary Elections Act.

- 3.3 For the avoidance of doubt, whilst political parties and election candidates may collect, use or disclose personal data without consent where permitted under other relevant legislation, other Data Protection Provisions under the PDPA will still apply to the extent that they are not inconsistent with other legislation.

4 DATA PROTECTION PROVISIONS

- 4.1 The Data Protection Provisions contain nine key obligations which political parties and election candidates are required to comply with if they undertake election activities relating to the collection, use or disclosure of personal data. The following section outlines how the Data Protection Provisions may apply to political parties' and election candidates' data activities:

Consent Obligation

- 4.2 A political party or election candidate must obtain the consent of the individual before collecting, using or disclosing his or her personal data for a purpose, unless the collection, use or disclosure without consent is required or authorised under the PDPA or other written law. This would include the personal data of employees (including election agents and volunteers) and potential voters.
- 4.3 A political party or election candidate that takes a photograph of an identifiable individual will be required to obtain consent, unless an exception applies. In particular, there is an exception for the collection, use and disclosure of personal data that is publicly available⁹. For example, when the individual appears at an event or location that is open to the public, taking a photograph of the individual would likely constitute collection of personal data that is publicly available for which consent is not required. Nevertheless, as a matter of good practice, political parties and election candidates should still provide signage or other forms of obvious notice to notify the public that photography is taking place.
- 4.4 A political party or election candidate may only collect, use or disclose personal data from a third party source, if the third party source can validly give consent on behalf of the individual for the collection, use or disclosure of his or her personal data; or the individual has provided consent to the disclosure of his or her personal data by the third party to the political party or election candidate for their intended purposes, unless an exception¹⁰ applies. As good practice, where a political party or election candidate has obtained the individual's personal data from a third party source, that political party or election candidate should inform the individual, upon request, of how his or her personal data was obtained by the political party or election candidate.

- 4.5 The political party or election candidate must allow an individual to withdraw his or her consent¹¹ for the collection, use or disclosure of his or her personal data for a purpose¹². As good practice, political parties or election candidate should keep a list of individuals who have exercised their right to withdraw their consent for the collection, use or disclosure of his or her personal data.
- 4.6 Political parties and election candidates are reminded that the collection, use or disclosure of such personal data must be in accordance with the relevant laws governing election activities, and political parties and election candidates also must not obtain, or attempt to obtain, consent by providing false or misleading information or using deceptive or misleading practices.
- 4.7 A political party or election candidate may continue to use the personal data of individuals that was collected before 2 July 2014 for the purposes for which it was collected, unless consent is withdrawn under the PDPA or the individual had otherwise indicated that he or she does not consent to such use. Fresh consent is required for the use of such personal data for new purposes.
- 4.8 A political party or election candidate is not required to obtain consent before collecting, using or disclosing any business contact information, or to comply with any other obligation in the Data Protection Provisions in relation to business contact information. Under the PDPA, business contact information refers to an individual's name, position name or title, business telephone number, business address, business electronic mail address, or business fax number and any other similar information about the individual, not provided by the individual solely for his or her personal purposes¹³.

Purpose Limitation Obligation

- 4.9 A political party or election candidate may collect, use or disclose personal data about an individual only for purposes that a reasonable person would consider appropriate in the circumstances and, if applicable, have been notified to the individual concerned.
- 4.10 A political party or election candidate should specify purposes, which should be reasonable, at an appropriate level of detail that will allow the individual to determine the reasons the political party or election candidate is collecting, using or disclosing his or her personal data. To be clear, there is no need for the political party or election candidate to specify every activity that is undertaken in relation to collecting, using or disclosing personal data when notifying individuals of its purposes, provided that an appropriate level of detail is provided.

- 4.11 The Purpose Limitation Obligation similarly applies in situations where political parties or election candidates collect personal data from third party sources.

Notification Obligation

- 4.12 A political party or election candidate must notify¹⁴ the individual of the purposes for which it intends to collect, use or disclose his or her personal data on or before such collection, use or disclosure of the personal data.

4.13	Example: Taking photographs of individuals at election activities in a private space Candidate A who does not belong to a political party wishes to take photographs of individuals at his election activities for use in his election campaign, including posting the photographs on his election campaign website and social media platforms. During Candidate A’s house-to-house visit to Mr. Tan’s residence, Candidate A’s photographer informs Mr. Tan of the purpose for the photo-taking (i.e. to be used in Candidate A’s election campaign, including posting on his election campaign website and social medium platforms), and obtains Mr. Tan’s consent to take photographs of him in his house. In this case, Candidate A may post the photographs taken of Mr. Tan during the house-to-house visit on his election campaign website and Facebook page. Should Mr. Tan withdraw consent for the use or disclosure of his photograph, Candidate A must stop using or disclosing the photograph concerned, as well as inform his data intermediaries and agents to cease using or disclosing the photograph for this purpose. Candidate A can cease further use or disclosure of the photograph in question by removing the photograph, or masking the image of Mr. Tan on his election campaign website or Facebook page.
4.14	Example: Taking photographs of individuals at election activities in public spaces Candidate B is part of Political Party B. Political Party B would like to have photographs of Candidate B meeting individuals taken during his walkabouts at public places such as wet markets, hawker centres, public housing void decks and corridors, for the purpose of publishing the photographs on Political Party B’s and Candidate B’s social media platforms.

¹⁴ Please refer to PDPC’s Guide to Notification at www.pdpc.gov.sg for more information.

	There is no need to obtain consent to take photographs of individuals appearing at such locations, as an exception under the PDPA provides for personal data that is publicly available to be collected, used or disclosed without the individual's consent. Nonetheless, as good practice, photographs should be taken openly and not clandestinely, and individuals should be notified of the purpose of the photography where possible.
4.15	Example: Collecting and using personal data for election-related communications Political Party C wishes to collect the names and contact details of individuals who attend its outreach events so it can send them information about the Party's upcoming events and election-related communications. Political Party C uses a form to collect the name and email address of each individual attending its events. The form states clearly the personal data collected is for the purpose of sending information about the Party's upcoming events and election-related communications, and also provides information about how the individual may withdraw consent for this purpose. In this case, Political Party C may use the personal data collected to send information about its upcoming events and election-related communications to email addresses of the individuals who provided their personal data for this purpose. Political Party C must also facilitate any requests from individuals to withdraw their consent for this purpose. Upon withdrawal of consent, Political Party C must cease to collect, use or disclose the personal data, and inform its data intermediaries and agents to cease to collect, use or disclose the personal data for this purpose (unless this is required or authorised under the PDPA or any other written law).

Access and Correction Obligations

- 4.16 A political party or election candidate must, upon request, (a) provide an individual with his or her personal data in the possession or under the control of the organisation and information about the ways in which the personal data may have been used or disclosed during the past year¹⁵; or (b) correct an error or omission in an individual's personal data that is in the possession or under the control of the organisation.

¹⁵ Please refer to PDPC's Guide to Handling Access Requests at www.pdpc.gov.sg for more information.

Accuracy Obligation

- 4.17 A political party or election candidate must make a reasonable effort to ensure that personal data collected by or on behalf of the political party or election candidate is accurate and complete if the personal data is likely to be used by the political party or election candidate to make a decision that affects the individual concerned, or is likely to be disclosed by the political party or election candidate to another organisation.

Protection Obligation

- 4.18 A political party or election candidate must protect all personal data in its possession or under its control by making reasonable security arrangements to prevent accidental or unauthorised access, collection, use, disclosure, copying, modification, disposal or similar risks (e.g. cyber-attacks, hacking)¹⁶. This includes, but is not limited to, protecting the personal data of individuals from whom they have received political donations, persons on the registers of electors, and potential voters.
- 4.19 Political parties and election candidates should also develop and put in place clear policies to ensure that the personal data of their employees (including election agents and volunteers) is protected.

4.20	Example: Protecting personal data of electors Candidate D is affiliated with Political Party D. Candidate D wishes to use personal data which Political Party D obtained from the registers of electors to distribute personalised election mailers to electors in each household. The full names and residential addresses of electors in each household are printed on the personalised election mailers and placed on the doors or gates of the electors' houses. Under the PDPA, Political Party D and Candidate D must ensure the proper handling and security of personal data to prevent unauthorised access, use or disclosure, or similar risks. As good practice, instead of leaving the personalised election mailers bearing the electors' full names and residential addresses on the doors or gates of their houses, Candidate D may, for example, slot the personalised election mailers into the letterboxes of landed houses or under the doors of public housing flats if the recipients are not home.

Retention Obligation

- 4.21 A political party and election candidate must cease to retain documents containing personal data, or anonymise it, as soon as it is reasonable to assume that (a) the purpose for which the personal data was collected is no longer being served by retention of the personal data, and (b) retention is no longer necessary for legal or business purposes.

- 4.22 The PDPA does not prescribe a specific retention period for personal data. When developing or reviewing its retention policy and period for personal data, a political party and election candidate should consider whether one or more of the purposes for which the personal data was collected is still being served by the retention of the personal data, and whether retention of the personal data is necessary for other legal or business purposes. Political parties and election candidates should be mindful not to unnecessarily preserve personal data “just in case” or in order to meet unforeseen circumstances.

Openness Obligation

- 4.23 The Data Protection Provisions contain a number of obligations in various sections which require organisations to develop and implement policies and practices that are necessary for the organisation to meet its obligations under the PDPA and to make information about their data protection policies and practices available, on request.
- 4.24 As good practice, political parties and election candidates who collect, use or disclose personal data may consider making their data protection policies available via their websites.
- 4.25 A political party and election candidate should also designate at least one individual responsible for ensuring its compliance with the PDPA (i.e. a data protection officer or “DPO”). The business contact information of that individual has to be made available and as good practice, should be readily accessible and operational during Singapore business hours and in the case of telephone numbers, be Singapore telephone numbers. The intent is to allow individuals to contact the DPO easily for any data protection related queries or concerns, so that the individual’s queries or concerns may be addressed in a timely manner.

5 DO NOT CALL PROVISIONS

- 5.1 The Do Not Call Provisions under the PDPA generally apply to marketing messages sent to a Singapore telephone number.
- 5.2 A message, the sole purpose of which is for election campaigning would not be covered by the Do Not Call Provisions, provided it does not offer to supply, offer, advertise or promote a good or service, or include any of the other purposes listed in the definition of a ‘specified message’ under the PDPA¹⁷. In addition, the Eighth Schedule of the PDPA provides for messages that will not be considered ‘specified messages’ for the purpose of the Do Not Call Provisions.

- 5.3 If a political party or election candidate intends to send a specified message to a Singapore telephone number, the political party or election candidate must comply with the Do Not Call Provisions. For more information, please refer to the Advisory Guidelines on the Do Not Call Provisions.
